Could be a good introduction- if you can find it

By Tom Rhoads

I have read this book twice, once several years ago and again very recently. It's a bit more viscerally exciting and not nearly as abstruse as the other Lem novels and stories I have read. It was originally published (if memory serves) in the 60's and so I suppose it's a relatively early work (it certainly has a strong early-60s flavor). The story concerns a powerful space warship sent to a remote planet to learn the fate of an identical ship which disappeared there. The central figure of the book is Rohan, the ship's navigator (and first officer, more or less); Lem's usual attention to the psychology of his characters is evident in his excellent treatment of Rohan's uneasy relationship with his commander and his observations on the scientists and spacers who make up the crew. However, the book is not as psychologically complex as the other Lem novels I have read. The tone of the book starts out in a very '60s hard-sf vein, veers towards horror a bit in the middle, then eventually focuses on the technical and moral dilemma faced by the crew as they try to avoid their predecessors' fate. The main theme of the book is the futility of humans' hubristic attempt to conquer (or at least understand) the universe which surrounds them; the quality of the writing (just) saves it from being heavy-handed.

It's a pretty good read and more approachable than some of Lem's other books (an interesting contrast for fans, I would say), such as Solaris, which draws on some of the same ideas. Try to find a version which was translated directly from Polish if you can (one US edition was translated from an earlier German translation!). Might be a good book to get someone with an interest in hard sf into Lem's work.

What the perfection could look like?

By Maciej

Here is a little known masterpiece of SF. I read it so many times but I still discover something new, which is astonishing because this is actually a mini-novel or if you prefer a long short story.

I will not reveal much about the content, but just a hint: the title "Invincible" is of course referring to the name of the proud space cruiser exploring planet Regis III, but NOT only to it. This story is really trying to stick to some scientific probability (sub gender hard-fiction). It was also written in the late 50s and sometimes the climate is similar to the one in "The Forbidden Planet" movie. But this is NOT a monster story - what awaits the crew of "Invincible" (and especially its First Officer Rohan) on the planet Regis III is MUCH worse (and much better) than any monster. Curious already? Buy it, read it, love it, never forget it.

And try to think - what the perfection could look like?

A Great Hard Sci-Fi Adventure

By A Customer

This is a great book by the famous eastern European sci-fi author Lem. An Earth spacecraft explores a previously unknown world and finds a very alien presence. Lots of science here, and evolutionary theory applied in an unusual manner, as humanity tries to understand the exotically alien universe (a major Lem theme throughout his works). A good adventure story as well. I read it as a teenager and occasionally reread it- it was a mind-expander.
